

STEP FIVE: Audience outreach

Now it's time to do one-to-many outreach. 3 step process:

1. Brainstorm channel types

Ask the question “What types of existing groups/communication channels cater to a person who might be interested in my topic?” It can start abstract:

“Dance-related WhatsApp groups” “STEM-related student clubs”

“Event-listing websites” etc. Make a list below

2. Identify specific channels

Now make a more concrete list of channels: specific newsletters, Discord servers, Facebook groups, WhatsApp groups, Twitter group chats, student clubs, event series, meetups on Meetup.com, etc.

How to find these:

- Ask friends for suggestions (especially superconnectors)
- Do some googling
- Prompt an LLM to help you. Here's an example prompt I made:

I want to advertise our science classes for FractalU. Please create for me an NYC-specific list of channels that might be excited to hear about our science classes: specific newsletters, Discord servers, student clubs, Facebook groups, WhatsApp groups, Twitter group chats, event series, meetups on Meetup.com, etc (you can add your own category types here)

Rank by audience size × relevance

Use section headers to categorize by type (eg Newsletters, Discord, Campus Clubs, etc). Give at least 5 per type – more if relevant

Add all to tables with these columns:

Name

Audience size / activity (posts in last 30 days) – estimate

Link (must be real and clickable)

Why it's a fit (≤20 words)

Compile your list

You can either add your list of channels below or add them to a more permanent list that you can reference into the future. (Here's an example of a permanent list I keep for advertising FractalU.)

3. Message them!

Now join these channels and message them. Or contact their organizers and ask them to put out the word for you.¹ Your message should be a blurb well-suited for that group/channel. You can use variants of the previous blurbs you wrote

Below are some FractalU semester-announcement messages I customized for different WhatsApp groups

¹ It's ok to do cold outreach to the heads of groups. They're often used to this.

Examples of channel-specific messages

FractalU Fall semester announce

#FU

Dance

Dancers! I invite you & friends to explore the 30+ classes & clubs offered by my lil learning community's 🍁 fall semester 🍁. You might enjoy:

- Intuitive Movement Workshop
- Alexander Technique
- Tango (focuses on intimacy & attunement – I'll be taking it)

Classes start in ~3 weeks. Tell your friends! See full catalogue here: <https://bit.ly/fractalu-fall>

Community

Gatherers & NYC Community Living

Hey all, if there are people in your communities who you think might enjoy our lil learning ecosystem here at Fractal, can you send them today's announcement of the fall semester? 💖

FractalU's 🍁 fall semester 🍁 is now live with 30+ classes and clubs! Some highlights for the community-minded:

- Parallax: A Collective Intelligence Experiment
- Foundations of NYC Government
- Economics of Community

Classes start in ~3 weeks. Tell your friends! See full catalogue here: <https://bit.ly/fractalu-fall>

Clowns

Clowns! I invite you & friends to explore the 30+ classes & clubs offered by my lil learning community's 🍁 fall semester 🍁. You might enjoy:

Feel free to use this workspace to generate messages for the channels

Test messages

Anything you write below doesn't count, so go wild, can be stream of consciousness, just get material on the page. If you want Tyler to look over your blurb, give him a shout!

Final blurb (this is the one you edit to actually use)

Don't forget your own channels

Lastly, don't forget to post on your existing one-to-many channels, including your:

- Facebook
- Twitter
- Instagram
- LinkedIn
- GCs you're a part of

I find that for personal channels like Facebook, posts are more likely to get engagement if they're part of stories (example tweet)