

STEP SIX: Follow up!!!!

THIS APPLIES TO ALL PREVIOUS STEPS. You gotta follow-up. Take someone who's very interested in your offering – they still probably live a busy life, are assaulted on all sides by the modern information environment, and might miss or forget to act on your message. Follow up!!!

For FractalU's semesters, I typically post announcements (a) when we launch our listing page and then (b) 3 days before applications are due (the follow-up message). If I'm messaging a busy person like a CEO or reporter, I typically follow up 2-3 days later if they haven't responded.

Personally, as a busy person, I take a follow-up message as a good sign. It means you actually have the chutzpah & persistence necessary to make a project work.

(Example follow-up message: "Just checking if you got this!")

I'm always shocked by how many people give up when their initial message doesn't get responses  Somewhat relatedly: Did you know that manuscript for Stephen King's first novel, Carrie, was rejected 30 times before finally being accepted for publication? Be persistent. It'll only be annoying if the thing you're offering genuinely isn't valuable for the people you're trying to gift it to.

When you're just starting out, I highly recommend being high-touch (my tweet on this).
